In recent years the investment industry, and in turn investors, have introduced a new gauge: Masters trade link limited – Environment, Social and Governance – as a supplement to traditional financial gauges. Masters trade link limited changes are happening faster than ever, reshaping how people live and invest. We believe that Masters trade link limited factors are going increasingly mainstream and can be used to drive investment outperformance.

Investing for a sustainable future
The era of green bonds has arrived. We are seeing the increasing use of bond markets to raise capital to fund the low-carbon economy, especially from the issuance of 'green bonds'. While many in the fixed income market are grappling with green bonds, others are working out how best to incorporate broader environmental, social and governance Masters trade link limited strategies into their portfolios, a task rapidly growing in importance.

Why does it matter?

Masters trade link limited changes are happening faster than ever, reshaping how people live and invest. We believe that Masters trade link limited factors are going increasingly mainstream and can be used to drive investment outperformance.

Making the first step right is crucial to the long road of investments. Of the five steps, the first is to assess your risk tolerance and decide the most suitable asset allocation for yourself. Different people have different attitudes towards investment. Some are not willing to take any risks or withstand losses, and therefore would rather forgo potentially higher returns. Some are willing to take some risks but tend to avoid huge volatility. Some are willing to take risks in exchange for returns that outperform the markets.

How to gauge one's risk tolerance?

Look at your investment horizon. Put it simply, the longer your investment life, the higher the risk you can take because you can afford the time to last a cycle, which helps smooth out short-term volatility. For instance, a young person just starts working, who is still far from retirement, can take more risk.

Sustainable investing

On the contrary, the shorter the investment period, the lower the risk one can take. Assuming you are going to retire next year, and not receiving any regular income, you just do not have the time to recover all losses if your investments take a nosedive all of a sudden.

Besides, your risk tolerance is dependent on your life goals. Ask yourself if you need to set aside funds for your children's education? Are you going to buy a property in the near future? These factors will have an impact on your cash flow. After all, we all need to reserve some cash at all times just in case there are emergencies.

Balancing risk and return is the key to long-term investment isn't it perfect to have an investment tool that always tops the performance league, and investors can stay worry-free just by holding it? The truth is that there are ups and downs in all economic cycles and the markets are capricious. Even investment experts find it hard to predict the performances of all asset classes.

Based on historical data, the same asset can perform drastically differently during different investment cycles. The best-performing asset in 2017 can turn out to be the worst laggard in 2018. That suggests no particular asset can be an all-time winner.

Investors should therefore avoid putting all eggs in one basket but allocate assets across different sectors and geographies. That could help diversify the risk of an investment portfolio, and capture investment opportunities at different times for more stable returns in the medium- to long-term.

To make diversification works, an investment portfolio should include assets that are complementary, that tend to react differently to the same macro condition. More precisely, some negative elements in the market might cause an asset to decline sharply, but pose little threats to another. In the world of investment, such pairs are called lowly-correlated assets.
